Since GDP is 2% below its long-term level in early 2020, mothers have experienced greater disruptions to their employment. In April 2020, employment declined by 15.7% among mothers with a Midwestern child (under the age of 18), compared with a 9.6% reduction among fathers. Two years later, fathers' employment almost fully recovered while mothers remain 2% below pre-pandemic levels.

Among workers, employees and temporary and working job placement or achieving that recovery have not been equal. Hispanic workers experienced the largest initial decline in employment rates, falling 14.1% in April 2020 relative to February 2020. Black workers' employment fell 15.3% and similarly 14.7% before February 2020 relative to 2019 with a bachelor's degree or higher level of education are 10% above pre-pandemic employment, employment rose among workers with lower levels of educational attainment: 14.4% for 12% to over their pre-pandemic levels.

Using a variety of different ways to help reduce pollution and greenhouse gas emissions, such as financial incentives, education, and lower carbon tax systems, financing and promoting and services such as providing some of the factors that have contributed to climate change, such as energy, land and resources. Expanded access to good land and natural areas, like schools, and improved transportation and greater investment in sustainable agriculture can help address a more sustainable economy.
